Chapter 1 by Sadie Johnson-Ouillette

Perhaps in a hypothetical universe -- a hypothetical world -- we would be able to.

Perhaps in another land, a land where we are accepted.

Perhaps another race of people -- possibly even a different race of creatures -- we would be able to live freely, expressing ourselves.

Perhaps once we are out in the real world, as real people, with real thoughts, real ideas, real opinions.

Perhaps it's just for now.

Perhaps it's forever.

Perhaps it is just because we happen to be different, or perhaps it is just because we are the same.

Of course, this may be merely a fantasy, something we imagine. But being a minority isn't something fake, right? We can't possibly be imagining our discrimination can we?

But that's what we've been told. That's what we've been told. Maybe this is a dystopia, or perhaps it's just the real world.

Whatever it is, we are living to it, and this is our story.
